Need a Laugh?
I think I was too fun to be a lawyer. Sure, a sense of humor is valuable in a profession that often addresses very serious issues, but my particular comedic streak wasn’t always appreciated. When I declared I was becoming a law librarian, people periodically inquired about librarians being old fashioned and stodgy. I don’t think that’s quite me either, but I know for certain that people who work in libraries have exceptional senses of humor. Yet the public perception persists. Take this headline from Bored Panda’s photographic series highlighting librarian humor: 20+ Times Librarians Surprised Everyone With Their Sense of Humor1 (hat tip to AALL’s KnowItAALL, a helpful way to stay current on matters of interest to law librarians).

Why are people surprised librarians have senses of humor? Evidence to the contrary abounds. Two Twitter accounts in particular are sure to delight you and provide respite from dark news days: Fake Library Statistics (@FakeLibStats) and Lousy Librarian (@LousyLibrarian).

The lengthy search results you get on Google when you type [library stapler life], including The Lives and Deaths of Academic Staplers, also show librarian humor in fine form.

And it’s not just public service librarians who resort to humor to enliven the workday. The website Awful Library Books is an irreverent look at books the site’s curators “find amusing and/or questionable for libraries trying to maintain a current and relevant collection.” These are titles, like the juvenile nonfiction work The Story of Watergate (1988) and the how-to gem Brainwashing is a Cinch (1966), that strike me as candidates for weeding yet remain on the shelves because, well, weeding is tough.

1 If I had to pick a favorite instance of humor from this post, it might be the one where the staff named all of the book trucks: Es Cart Go, Dolly Lama, Paul McCartney, etc. I’d add my own to the mix: Cart Blanche.

These sites demonstrate the value of humor in libraries. We’re working in a service industry, and that brings us in contact with patrons. On one hand, humor helps us cope with frustrations wrought by our patrons. Endless jokes about the staplers patrons seem to destroy after a mere two weeks of acquisition and finding wry humor in a patron’s absolute joy you were able to quickly find an article in the catalog for them after they’d looked “everywhere” for “hours” help us let off steam pent up because the people we help don’t always understand what we do. @LousyLibrarian’s tweet reflects this sentiment: "Instead of libraries everyone should just get a Kindle." "Great idea! And instead of roads everyone should just get a bucket of asphalt."

But humor also enables us to connect with our patrons. As we near April Fools’ Day, consider creating a humorous display to engage your patrons. Why not feature all of your books on lawyer jokes? Alternatively, empty bookstands with a sign that reads “Please be patient. Our display on procrastination will be up soon.”2 could be an easy way to get patrons to reach out, if only because they view you as approachable and not too self-serious. I appreciate that outright silliness may not fly in your office. If you’ve been using a newsletter to inform law firm partners of the latest trends in legal research or your staff’s expertise, consider incorporating a lighthearted reference to attorneys’ favorite print works now available electronically by referencing the book’s color or location, like “You now have access to CCH eBooks by clicking here. You may recall that these are the blue and white books we used to shelve near the portrait of [insert name]. They’d also go missing regularly around February in advance of tax time. Electronic access should resolve this issue.”

As I mentioned in my last article, I’ve been reading past ORALL newsletters. I can’t say we’ve always been laugh-out-loud funny3 in our newsletter, but our desire to connect with each other to share information is the same desire we

3 There are some exceptions, of course, like Mike Whiteman’s March 2008 President’s Column where he professes disappointment with the ORALL Presidency not meeting his expectations: “First of all, where is the shiny ORALL limo to take me from point A to point B? How about the ORALL mansion where I would live during my tenure as President? And what about the ORALL army that I could use to crush my enemies?” I don’t disagree with Mike’s complaints, but I’d be remiss if I didn’t point out that he could’ve changed the bylaws to include these perks during his years on the Bylaws Committee (i.e., 2010-present). (Most of these years he chaired the committee.)
seem to evidence when we use humor to reach out to our patrons. My two favorite experiences have been learning about past members and discovering that the more things change, the more they stay the same. With this in mind, I’m happy to report that we have received a list from AALL of all of its members in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky in hopes that we can reach out to their members who are not ours. The membership committee is working on several projects associated with this goal. Also, I hope to create an ad-hoc archives committee to help us explore matters relating to ORALL’s archives, which are housed in the law library of the Supreme Court of Ohio. We have an extensive print history, and I’d love it if we could make it more readily accessible to our members. If you’re interested in helping with this project, please email me at Mattson.30@osu.edu or wait until you see the official inquiry over the ORALL listerv.

And to leave you with a joke that I hope appeals to law librarians:

Q: Why didn’t the thief burgle the library?
A: Because he was afraid the judge would give him a long sentence.

ORALL 2018 Local Arrangements Update
by Carol Bredemeyer & Lisa Britt Wernke, Local Arrangements Committee

The Local Arrangements Committee has begun working on this year's Annual Conference. It will be October 17-20 at the Kingsgate Marriott on the campus of the University of Cincinnati. Our opening reception will be at the Cincinnati Art Museum (http://www.cincinnatimuseum.org/). We have looked at the meeting rooms and are perusing the menu options. The hotel also has a spacious bar for after program conversations. We'll be selecting restaurants for Dine Arounds on Thursday night and planning for our annual Game Night, including the euchre tournament. We're sure the Education Committee will have a great array of programs for us to choose from. Plan to join us in Cincinnati this fall!
